Installing a Boyd's M1 Stock

Another Boyd's Stocks for Dummies request

Posted By: Gus Fisher

Date: Sunday, 16 March 2003, at 6:23 p.m.

Area 1. I prefer to clear on all of them so they will fit milled trigger guards. This area may have to be widened, lengthened or deepened for the milled trigger guard. Not applicable though if using a stamped trigger guard.

Area 2. The two bedding surfaces may have to be inlet further down if too far from the top of the stock. Measure against a G.I. stock. If it's within 20 thousandths of an inch, no sweat. 50 thousandths or more calls for more inletting.

Area 3. No problem as long as the housing doesn't stick or jam there. Hardly ever a problem.

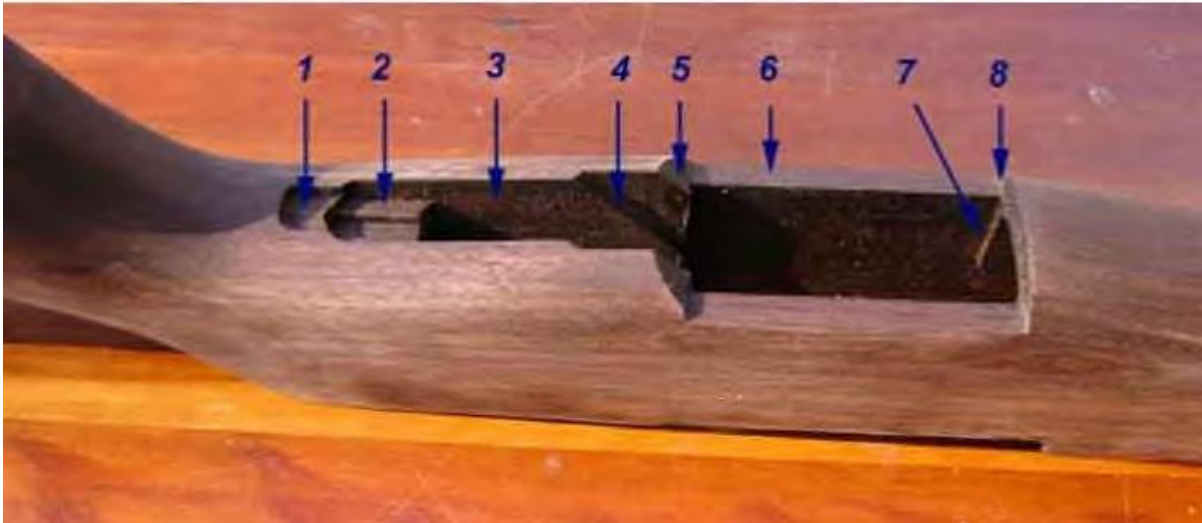

Area 4. One of the BIGGEST problems lately on Boyd's stocks. The angled cuts on each side usually have to be deepened and taken further back to the rear. The triggerguard should not bear on this clearance cut.

Area 5. This sometimes is a problem and has to be cleared back a bit. The housing may contact here, but should not be bearing any real pressure against it.

Area 6. Only AFTER areas 1,2,3,4,5 and 8 are cleared should one carefully take this area down a little if the tension on closing the trigger guard is too much. If you can close the trigger guard and open it without getting a hernia, stop there as it will loosen with use.

Area 7. A very important area to ensure the receiver is not loose front to rear. Often loose on Boyd's stocks and has to be epoxy bedded.

Area 8. A prime cause of cracking of original stocks is when the front of the trigger housing contacted here. There should be no contact or the effect of counter recoil can crack the stock here. You don't have to have much clearance. As long as you can barely see light between the housing and this part, you are just fine. HTH

 ITEMS FOR SALE***

AR15-A1 parts

AR15-A1 ORIGINAL barreled upper receiver appears to be mid 1960s - mid 1970s vintage. Does NOT include bolt group or charging handle. Has been in family for 30+ years, mostly in storage. CMPC marked barrel indicates Colt manufacture with chrome chamber, not chrome bore. Upper is unmarked. Features are period-correct: 1:12 twist; A1 muzzle device; cast front sight base + lug; round front sight; black triangular hand-guards; drain-hole-drilled heat shields (NOT Left-Right marked); round concentric circle fwd-assist; etc. Shows light exterior wear with excellent bore. $400 firm. Contact <robert.coffey@netzero.net> for further details or to arrange inspection at next Bears match.

Ruger 10/22 parts

Ruger 10/22 factory barrel and factory stock. Barrel has less than 100 rounds through it and stock is black synthetic. Both for $50. Contact Victor at victor_murillo9@msn.com or see him at the Bears match.
